LEAGUE FIGHT MAY CONTINUE SAYS SULLIVAN

Both Senate and House As a Whole Unsettled.

CONSIDER FOREIGN TRADE DEMANDS

President Expected to Oppose Irreconcilables' Position.

By MARK SULLIVAN.

The easiest thing to understand about our foreign affairs is the composition and the sentiments of the Senate Committee on Foreign Rela-tions. This body in the past has FRANCE AWAITS shared with the Senate Committee on Finance the position of being the most important committee in the Senate. During the two years' fight on the league of nations the Foreign Relations Committee came into the limelight to such a degree and by its victory over the White House won such a prestige that it now outshadows the Finance Committee.

It is the determination of the For eign Relations Committee not to surrender the prestige it recently won that accounts largely for the present tension between it and the White House. In this situation there is a factor which the public may overlook and which even the Senators factor is that whereas the committee's victory last year was against a President of the opposite party their fight must now be, if they make a fight, against a President of their

The Senate Committee on Foreign Affairs consists of sixteen members ten Republicans and six Democrats. For practical purposes, all power is exercised by the Republican majority of the committee, in order to execute.

This year, however, not only are there still six out-and-out irreconcilables on the committee, but in addition to that practically all of the other four have changed their attitude, and their change has been in the direction of the irreconcilable position. McCumber has formally and publicly shifted somewhat away from the position he form-rly had. Kellog has made no formal change, but it is clear that he understands the practical difficulty of maintain ing his former position. New has ing his former position. New has
